'Win-win situation' for buyers of villas in Portugal and Spain

Falling prices in the European property market, alongside the strengthening exchange rate, indicate that now could be a good time to invest in villas in Portugal and Spain.

Marc Da-Silva, editorial director at International Estate Agent Today, said the increase in value of sterling against the euro and decrease in property prices provided a win-win situation for UK buyers.

The property journalist said Spain and Portugal were favoured destinations amongst British investors.

Charles Purdy, managing director at Smart Currency Exchange, commented: "With the euro weakening, at one stage we were above €1.25/£1, property prices and the cost of living are nearly ten per cent less than this time last year."

Rightmove Overseas said earlier this week that the Algarve was a popular area for UK buyers seeking foreign property.

Spain accounted for one-quarter of all searches on the property website, with the Costa del Sol and Costa Blanca the main areas of interest for investors.
